FOLLOWERS OF THE NEW FAITH: Culture Change and the Rise of Protestantism in Brazil and Chile by EMILIO WILLEMS

The emerging industrialization and urbanization in Brazil and Chile provides the background and the impetus for a growing Protestant assault on traditional Catholicism.

Protestantism has enjoyed its greatest popularity among recent rural-urban migrants, whose very existence as a discrete social class was directly affected by structural changes imposed by the emerging order.

In this thoughtful and revealing study, Professor Williams assesses the influence of Protestantism from its introduction into Brazil and Chile in the early 1800s and analyzes its function as beneficiary—and agent—of striking social and subtle psychological change.

FOUNDATIONS OF ABNORMAL PSYCHOLOGY
Edited by PERRY LONDON, University of Southern California, and DAVID ROSENHAN, Educational Testing Service, Princeton, New Jersey
This multi-authored text, edited and integrated by Professors London and Rosenhan, deals with positive abnormality as well as traditional psychopathology. The aim of the text is to examine abnormality from the vantage point of what is known in general psychology of personality, child development, and genetics. Moreover, in order to foster a better understanding of "abnormality," a description of "normality" is provided. Authors include Hirsch of Illinois, Maher of Brandeis, Kagan of Harvard, Zigler of Yale, Treisman of Oxford, and Ashby of Illinois. Each chapter has a final summary and is followed by a glossary.

TOWARD A CONTEMPORARY PSYCHOLOGY OF INTUITION
A Historical, Theoretical, and Empirical Inquiry
By MALCOLM R. WESTCOTT, Vassar College
This is the first book by a psychologist devoted to a detailed study of intuition. The author offers a conception of intuition in terms of contemporary psychological theory and data, and presents the results of more than ten years of empirical research with children and adults. He develops an operational definition of intuition as the event which occurs when individuals consistently reach accurate conclusions on the basis of consensually inadequate information.

CONTemporary issues in developmental psychology
Edited by NORMAN S. ENDLER and LAWRENCE R. BOULTER, both of York University, Toronto, and HARRY OSSER, San Francisco State College
Utilizing the comparative approach, this collection of readings reflects the status of developmental psychology in the 7th decade of the 20th Century. The editors have chosen contributions which highlight the fundamental changes in the study of developmental psychology since World War II both in methods of investigation and in theoretical beliefs. Balancing viewpoints are presented where articles are available on both sides of an issue. The editors, in an extensive introductory chapter, and in introductions to subsequent chapters, have described the theoretical and methodological context of the 54 articles included.

INFERENTIAL STATISTICS IN THE BEHAVIORAL SCIENCES
By SHELDON G. LEVY, University of Michigan
The unique feature of this undergraduate introduction to statistics is Professor Levy's reversal of the traditional approach to the subject. Most introductory texts start off with descriptive statistics and then move into inference. This text begins with several concepts of inferential statistics: Descriptive statistics is brought in only as is necessary to continue the inferential argument. In addition, there is a full development of the relationship between the abstract world of mathematics and the real world.

THE EXPERIMENTAL PSYCHOLOGY OF SENSORY BEHAVIOR
By JOHN F. CORSO, State University of New York, Cortland
An experimental approach to sensory psychology, this volume is designed to lead the reader gradually into the substantive core of experimental sensory psychology, and then into general behavioral theories. Utilizing a selective and in-depth rather than eclectic treatment of his subject matter, Professor Corso presents detailed material from the related disciplines which underlie the science of psychology and restricts the scope of topics in experimental psychology primarily to unifying concepts, research methodology, and sensory processes.
