The Interamerican Society of Psychology (ISP), institution founded in 1951, gathers psychologists from North America, Central America, the Caribbean, South America and Spain. Every two years an Interamerican Congress of Psychology is organized at the different countries where a high number of behavioral science's professionals attend.

In these events the most recent advances on psychological research and its applied areas are presented. The city of Lima will become an intercontinental scientific space for discussion of the most important topics in contemporary psychology. Under the motto 50 years of Interamerican Psychology: Redefining its future, the 29th Interamerican Congress of Psychology will be held at Lima, Peru, from July 13 to July 18, 2003.

Given the cultural richness and tourist sites offered by Peru, guided visits to museums, galleries, and cultural centers will be offered during the Congress, together with a range of social activities. Similarly, pre- and post-Congress tours to visit the country's major tourist centers will also be promoted.
